Lawtrac Adds Additional Geographic Verification

Additional Layer of Security Rejects Users from Designated Locations

East Meadow, N.Y., November 1, 2010 – Long Island-based LT Online Corporation, the leading provider of software solutions for in-house legal departments, announced today that its Lawtrac Online Matter Management System now incorporates geographic verification of individuals. This added layer of security will scrutinize the user's physical location as additional corroboration to ensure only verified users can access the system.

The new initiative reverses the typical logic behind login procedures. In addition to the typical procedure of determining if the user is authorized, Lawtrac now also takes additional, automatic steps to determine if the user is suspicious or unwanted – even if the user has credentials – using the same technology that financial institutions use to help detect credit card fraud. “Our system will examine the user's geographic location anywhere in the world and check it against their IP address,” explains Jim Harris, Vice President of Product Development at LT Online Corp. “Doing so will allow us to reject unwelcome users even before they reach the log-in screen.”

The system, developed internally, can determine the country, region, state even the city and postal code of a visitor in less than a millisecond, enabling clients to prevent access from countries or states where they do not have offices or collaborating outside counsel. The same technique can be used for their single-state or specific region customers.

“Security is extremely important to our clients and users,” added Mr. Harris. “Our applications are state-of-the-art and we remain committed to keep up with all available technologies and deploy them to their advantage.”

LT Online's LAWTRAC Online Matter and Contract Management System is in use by over 100 of the largest and most respected corporations. Their applications has a presence in more than 120 countries world-wide.
